

Apprenticeships boom

15th August 2009

CVGT has launched a campaign to find 20 apprentices to work in the building trades.

The apprentices are required in all areas including building, plumbing, painting, plastering and electrical

“Over the past few weeks there has been an unprecedented demand from employers for apprentices” said Kellie Baines Bendigo Group Training manager.

“This is to meet the surge in Government building work, the continued strong housing market and major commercial developments in the pipeline’

“Our projections show that over the next few months the demand will grow even greater for apprentices”, Ms Baines said.

“We are looking for people with a strong work ethic and some practical experience. Among them are those who are doing or have completed a pre apprenticeship, out of trade apprentices, school based apprentices who want to start a full time apprenticeship and experienced labourers in the building industry

For successful applicants, CVGT will support them through finding the right employer, organizing required training and providing on the job support
